VERMONT STATE HOUSE, MONTPELIER.

STATE HOUSES OF VERMONT.

For thirty years after the organization of a state government, Vermont had no seat of government—no state house. Governors, councilors, and legislators were as peripatetic as German peddlers, and not unfrequently footed their way, with packs of clothing and provisions on their backs. This was inconvenient, to say the least; and for that reason, or a better one, the legislature in 1805 made Montpelier “the permanent seat of the legislature for holding all their sessions,” with two conditions: First, that Montpelier should give the land for a capitol, and build the house by September, 1808; and, second, that if a future legislature shall cease to hold their sessions in Montpelier, the state shall pay to Montpelier the value of the property.

THE FIRST STATE HOUSE.

Montpelier complied with the required conditions, having built the house and deeded the land, at an expense then reckoned at from $8,000 to $9,000 for the house and $2,000 for the land. The building was of wood, three stories high, and made ten-cornered in shape, by cutting the corners of the ends fronting on the street, so as to admit of winding stairs to the gallery and council chamber, and by cutting in the center of the front for a covered way into the building. A bell-tower surmounted the center, and from the sides of this tower the roof ran down in each direction to the eaves to meet each corner.

THE SECOND STATE HOUSE.

November 8, 1832 (being twenty-seven years, to a day, after the passage of the first act making Montpelier the capital), the legislature made provision for “erecting a new State House at Montpelier, on condition that the inhabitants of Montpelier shall give good and sufficient security, by January 1, following, to pay into the Treasury of this State the sum of fifteen thousand dollars—one half of said sum to be paid in one year, and the remainder in two years from the passage of this act.” Montpelier gave the bond thus required, and more than fulfilled it, having, in addition, purchased land for the state, at an expense of $3,000—thus making the sum of $18,000 paid by Montpelier for the second state house. Samuel C. Crafts, Allen Wardner, and George T. Hodges fixed the site of the new house, about two hundred and fifty feet northwest of the first state house, and adopted the plan of Ammi B. Young. Lebbeus Egerton was the superintendent until the autumn of 1836, when Ammi B. Young was appointed, he having been the architect from the beginning. The work was commenced in the winter of 1833, and completed in the autumn of 1838 (five years and a half), at a cost of $132,077.23. The exterior walls were of granite, lined with brick, and the partitions in the basement, or first story, were also of brick—but the partitions above were of wood. The site, entrance, and grounds of the second state house were the same as the present.

This house was first occupied by the legislature in October, 1836, and, after twenty-one years of use, on the evening of January 5, 1857, the building took fire under the floor of the representatives' hall. From thence the fire ran within the ceiling to the roof and dome, and quickly turned our "beautiful house" into a ruin, which can be matched for picturesqueness nowhere short of the land, and perhaps the very temple, that gave the pattern for the chief glory of ours, the portico.

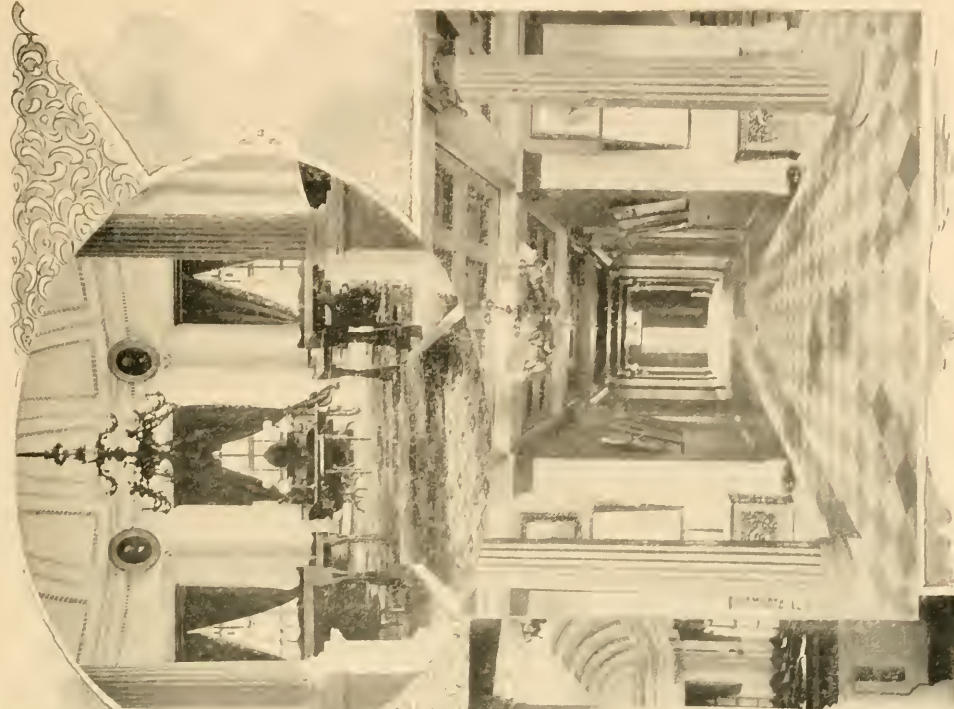

THE THIRD STATE HOUSE.

On the 18th of February, 1857, the legislature met in special session, and, after nine days spent in deliberation and debate, an appropriation of $40,000 was made [Sec. 1] "for the purpose of rebuilding the State House, and making such repairs and improvements in and around the same, and furnishing said House, as may be necessary—provided the inhabitants of Montpelier, or any individuals, shall, before the rising of this Legislature, give good and sufficient security to the Treasurer of this State, to pay into the Treasury of the State a sum equal to the whole cost of the work, mentioned in the first section of this act, one half of said sum to be paid in one year, and the remainder in two years from the passage of this act, or on the completion of the work."

In compliance with the provisions of this act, a bond was executed on the 27th of February, 1857, by Elisha P. Jewett, George W. Collamer, and Erastus Hubbard, in the penal sum of $100,000, conditioned as the act provided. The legislature therefore appropriated, November 10, 1857, $30,000 more, "and such further sum as may be paid into the treasury on the bond," all "for the purpose of paying the expense of rebuilding the State House in Montpelier, and making such repairs and improvements in and around the same, and furnishing said house, as may be necessary." In August, 1858, it was obvious that the appropriation by the state would not permit the roof to be finished and the walls protected through the ensuing winter. No demand was made by the state upon Montpelier or the signers of the bond, at that or at any other time; but the people of Montpelier took their own course and paid $10,000. The legislature, in 1858, refused any appropriation, and, of course, left the superintendent without funds, except such as might be paid by Montpelier, and used under the words of the act of November 10, 1857, above quoted. Then such of the citizens of Montpelier as could pay the money from their own funds, or had credit enough to make a good bank note, subscribed a fund of $53,000, out of which, after paying interest and expenses of discounting the paper, the superintendent was assured of about $40,000 net for the completion of the house.

Governor Fletcher appointed George P. Marsh of Burlington, Norman Williams of Woodstock, and John Porter of Hartford, commissioners, and Thomas E. Powers of Woodstock, superintendent, under the act of February 27, 1857. The commissioners determined not only to "rebuild the State House, with repairs and improvements," but to enlarge it by lengthening the main building and both of the wings.

The structure consists of a central building and two wings. The central building has in front a Doric portico, seventy-two feet eight inches in length, by eighteen feet projection, connected with wall in rear of the same which forms the main front wall of the central building and is of the same width with portico; the side walls are ninety-five feet eight inches long. The height of the portico to the apex is just sixty feet. The central building is surmounted by a dome and cupola, fifty-six feet nine inches in height from the apex, which, of the portico to top of the balustrade of dome, is forty-four feet in diameter at its base. The whole is capped by a statue representing "Agriculture," by Larkin G. Mead of Brattleboro. The wings are each fifty-two feet long in front, by fifty feet eight inches at the ends, and are each forty-seven feet eight inches high, from the base course to the apex of the pediment, and their cornices are eight feet four inches below that of the central building, thus giving the form of the Greek cross to the structure.

THE SENATE CHAMBER,

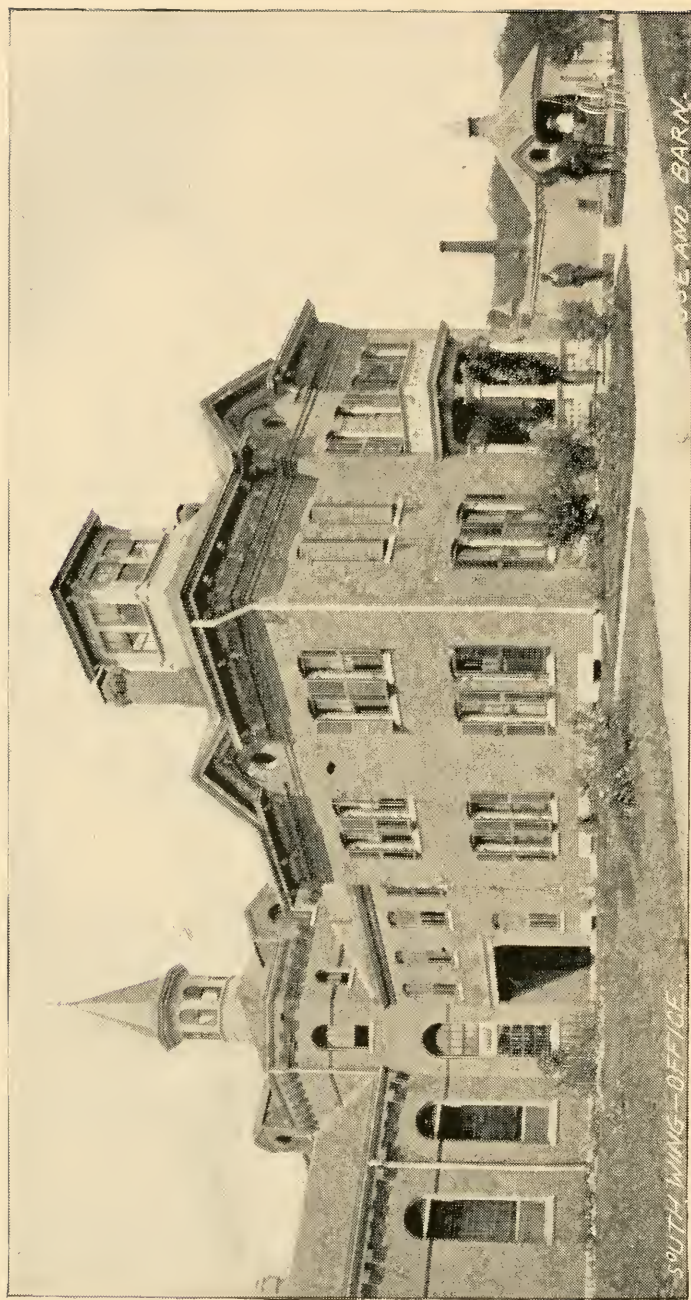

occupying the east wing of the second story, is elliptical in form, forty-six by thirty-eight feet, twenty-two feet high, adorned with Corinthian fluted columns, having carved capitals, supporting an entablature, from which springs a cove ceiling, continuing the outline of the ellipse. The ceiling is moulded and enriched in panels, having counter curved heads ornamented in stucco, and bead and button mouldings in the beams, terminating in a moulded rim of elliptical form, surrounding yet other ornamental panels, with circular returns and ornaments between, on the flat of the ceiling, converging to the centerpiece, from which is hung a massive twelve-light chandelier. The lobbies are adorned with fluted columns, having bases and Corinthian capitals, resting on a pedestal, and supporting an entablature and open balustrade of the gallery. The lobbies are parallel to the curve of the room. The senators' desks and chairs are designed and arranged so as to give ample space for the comfort and convenience of the occupants. The furniture throughout the building is of black walnut.

THE REPRESENTATIVES' HALL

is sixty-nine and nine tenths by sixty-seven feet, thirty-one feet high, and is in form of the letter D. The walls are relieved by fluted pilasters, having bases supported by pedestals and carved capitals of the Corinthian order, supporting an enriched entablature, from which springs a cove to the flat ceiling, terminating in a moulded border and stopped at each intersection by a moulded pendant. The panels of the cove and ceiling are double sunk, exceedingly well proportioned, moulded and ornamented, and are continued in curves parallel to that of the wall. The centerpiece is very graceful in outline, is eighteen feet in diameter, and bears unmistakable signs of originality. The rear end of this room is finished like the sides, but without the cove at the top of the entablature, and, by the skilful treatment of the architect, has not the heavy, stolid appearance of the Attic base usually accompanying the natural order of finish. The various cornices and panels in the ceilings of the room are enriched with stucco ornaments just sufficient for an easy relief and to give a graceful effect to the whole. The rear of the hall has a raised platform, approached by a flight of four stairs on either side of the speaker's desk, protected in front by a black walnut moulded rail. The seats on this platform, for the use of the senate in joint assembly, were designed for the place and are appropriate to it. From the bar of the house rises at each side the inclined plane, on which are secured the representatives' desks and chairs. These are placed on circles corresponding to the shape of the room. The speaker's and clerk's desks, though plainer in style than that of the president of the senate, are well proportioned and beautiful in finish. The lobbies are finished similar to those of the senate chamber, and are made on a circle parallel to the rear wall of the hall. Opening from the flight of stairs on each side of the corridor and vestibule, by an easy ascent, are the galleries of the representatives' hall and senate chamber; and from the side nearest the latter room is a flight conducting to the large room in the third story, and from thence to the cupola and dome.

LIBRARY BUILDING.

The library annex, connecting with the west wing at the northwest corner, is a building forty-eight feet wide by seventy-four feet long. The first of its two stories is occupied by the supreme court room and rooms for the judges and lawyers; the second, by the state library and the room of the Vermont Historical Society. The building is of rough granite and the interior finish of the various rooms is admirably adapted to the uses for which they were designed. An object of particular interest in the room of the historical society is the magnificent fireplace, built from Vermont marbles, the gift of Senator Redfield Proctor.

The library contains some 32,000 volumes, and in the historical room are gathered many interesting objects and relics relating to the early history of Vermont, among which is the first printing press used north of Mexico, on this continent. It was brought to Westminster in 1781, and used for printing the Vermont Gazette and Green Mountain Post Boy.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

GOVERNOR JOHN G. McCULLOUGH.

The present governor of Vermont, Gen. John G. McCullough, has been a cosmopolitan, almost from boyhood, living South, West, East, and North. He was born in Delaware in 1835, his mother being of Welch extraction, and his father of Scotch-Irish, both of whom died before he had reached his eighth year. Left without patrimony, the boy had to rely on his own exertions and work out his own future. He was graduated at Delaware college in July, 1855, taking the first honors of his class. He studied law in Philadelphia in the office of St. George Tucker Campbell—a very distinguished advocate of that day—and at the same time attended the law school of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1859 with the degree of LL. D. The same year he was admitted to the bar of the supreme court of the state of Pennsylvania. But close application during his collegiate course, as also in his legal studies, undermined his health, and his physicians urged a radical change of climate. Hence, in 1859, he sailed for California, leaving agreeable associations behind in exchange for the rough-and-tumble life among strangers in a frontier state. Upon reaching his destination he was admitted to the bar of the supreme court of California, and located at Mariposa, where his success in his profession was marked and immediate. At this time the War of the Rebellion was opening. At first, in California, parties were nearly balanced, and the advocates of the South were hot blooded, arrogant, and aggressive. Southern sympathizers were jubilant and intolerant, and did their utmost to strangle the loyal sentiment, hoping to drag the young state into the coming conflict, whose camp fires were soon to throw their lurid light on the eastern horizon. They would unite California with the fortunes of the Confederacy. McCullough was a strong supporter of the Union cause, and was very active on the stump and elsewhere, by word and deed, in denouncing and opposing the schemes of the Southern adherents. Although hardly domiciled in the state, in recognition of his valuable services, he was successively elected to the general assembly of California in 1861; to the senate in 1862; and to the attorney-generalship of the state in 1863, when he removed to Sacramento, the capital, and there he administered the latter office for the four years succeeding with ability and success. Retiring from office in December, 1867, he removed to San Francisco, where for the next five years he diligently practised his profession on his own account until the spring of 1873, when he removed to Vermont. During the period of his active professional career he was engaged in much important litigation and conducted as chief counsel many cases of great consequence. He took rank with the leaders of the San Francisco bar of that period, which for ability and learning was notable. California had already attracted many of the most distinguished lawyers of the East, and Vermont had furnished among others such men as O. L. Shafter, T. W. Park, and Frederic Billings. A "History of the Bench and Bar of California," a volume of some 1,100 pages, was published during the past year, and it contains an article devoted to the subject of this sketch (too long to insert here); but how he was regarded by the profession may be inferred from the dedication of the volume, which is in the following words:

"THIS HISTORY IS REGARDFULLY INSCRIBED TO
HON. JOHN G. McCULLOUGH, LL. D.,
NOW A DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC MAN OF VER-MONT, REMEMBERED AS A LIGHT TO THE EARLY
BAR OF CALIFORNIA, AND FOR HIS BRILLIANT ADMINISTRATION OF THE OFFICE OF
ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
1863-1867."

Since coming to Vermont, nearly thirty years ago, he has never practised his profession, but has engaged extensively in railroading and banking in this and neighboring states. He was an important factor and leading spirit in the reorganization of the Erie Railroad after the depressions of 1884 and 1893. His administration as president, for fifteen years, of the affairs of the Bennington & Rutland Railway, was just and liberal to its patrons and its employees. No depression lessened the wages of the men or affected the generous service to the public. He is now largely interested in and director of many corporations within and without the state; insurance, trust, banking, railway, and other companies. Among the Vermont corporations he is a director of the National Life Insurance company, the Central Vermont Railway company, and president of the First National bank of North Bennington. His investments here and elsewhere are carefully and judiciously made, possessing, as he does, the faculty of determining what enterprises promise to be successful and remunerative rather than problematical or doubtful. In short, he is a conservative, level-headed business man, apart from his abilities as a lawyer.

His efforts in behalf of the Battle Monument association and the Vermont Soldiers' home have been untiring, and have contributed largely to their prosperity and the achievement of the commendable objects for which they were inaugurated. In all local affairs he has taken a lively interest, and has always lent them a ready and helpful hand. He gives liberally for their promotion, both of his time and his purse.

As president of the Mount Anthony Golf club he may be seen on gala days in the midst of a bevy of young people, where he is apt to be found with the youngest and jolliest of the lot.

As a Republican, he has always had mature convictions concerning all public questions, state or national, and for a generation his ringing voice has been heard in every campaign in our state and elsewhere as a logical and forcible speaker. He represented Vermont as one of the delegates in the National Republican conventions of 1880, 1888, and 1900, being chairman of the delegation in the latter year. He was senator from Bennington county in 1898, and was made president pro tempore of the senate at the session of that year.

As the present governor of this state, General McCullough has added new honors to both Vermont and her people. He is an able and conservative chief executive, a courteous and kindly gentleman, who, during the recent session of the general assembly has won the admiration of not only those of his political faith but of every man who has had the good fortune of coming in contact with him. Vermont will have had much added to her reputation as a state by the wise, conservative, and business-like administration of John G. McCullough.

Thus have we outlined briefly the course of Governor McCullough's career. No sketch, however, would be symmetrical unless a word be given concerning the personality of the man. While success like his, in professional and business endeavor, might lead many men of less self-poise and common sense to exclusiveness, Governor McCullough is always approachable, cordial, and considerate, and ever in touch with the masses and in sympathy with their pursuits and welfare in life. In short, he is a gentleman everywhere and always, and his geniality and unfailing courtesy, inseparable from a temperament like his, gives him a charming personality which makes him hosts of enthusiastic friends whose confidence and respect he holds and deserves to hold because he is at once affable, candid, and sincere.

His farm at North Bennington, while of modest and moderate extent, is most attractive, and his residence, shaded by stately elms and maples in the midst of smiling lawns, is commodious and imposing. He is an intelligent, if not a scientific, farmer, and has brought his acres to a high state of cultivation.

It is here that he loves to dwell and to entertain his friends, as he often does, and most freely. He loves the people of this old, historic township, and is beloved by them. Neither business, nor pleasure, nor politics, nor Newport, nor Europe allure him from his contented farm life and his restful retreat, developed and beautified by his own intelligent and tireless hand. Here he was married, here he has lived almost for a generation, here his children were born, and here he expects to continue his useful and active career.

A FEW REMARKS BY THE COMPILER.

In 1896 the first Legislative Souvenir of the Vermont general assembly was issued, and in 1898 the second book made its appearance; both of these were issued by the Watchman Publishing Co. of Montpelier, and reflected credit and enterprise upon the publishers, but for some reason no book was issued for the session of 1900. A souvenir of this character is a biennial chapter in the annals of the state. It has been thought particularly proper that the first session of the general assembly in the twentieth century should be recorded by both pen and camera so that those who shall come in later years may know more intimately those who have taken so prominent a part in the opening chapter of legislation in this new century. It is to be hoped that the publication of similar books may be continued indefinitely, for in no other way can the personnel of the legislature be preserved in more attractive or interesting form.

This Souvenir of the session of 1902 has been undertaken with the confident belief that its appearance will mark the beginning of a series of similar books, that will prove valuable both biographically and pictorially.

To this galaxy of legislative portraiture has been added many of our state officials and those national characters who have played so important a part in this history-making decade of our country. There has also been added both interior and exterior views of our splendid capitol and views of several of the more important state institutions.

It has been deemed especially appropriate—owing to the recent visit to our state and capital of our always honored and ever beloved chief executive, President Theodore Roosevelt—that a suitable portrait of the President should be used as a frontispiece for this publication, accordingly the compiler communicated this thought to the President with a request for his favorite photograph with his signature thereon, and in reply received the following:

WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON, October 27, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR:

By direction of the President I have much pleasure in sending you the accompanying favorite photograph, with his autograph thereon.

Very truly yours,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,

Secretary to the President.

MR. WILLIAM H. JEFFREY.

During the session Vermont honored herself by the unveiling of an historic portrait of her famous and revered son Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, who commanded the Oregon during her memorable trip around Cape Horn to Santiago. Rear Admiral Clark honored the joint assembly with his presence. It is to be regretted that no suitable reproduction of the new portrait could be obtained for use in this publication. It is, however, with pleasure that Rear Admiral Clark's favorite portrait is presented.

The compiler, in closing these remarks, wishes to acknowledge the kindness of Col. Charles S. Forbes of The Vermonter, in loaning several engravings for use in this publication. The Vermonter has long been recognized as Vermont's leading publication and one that should be in every Vermont household.

In the preparation of a work of this character the greatest care and judgment must be used in the selecting and making of good photographs. This department was wisely entrusted to Mr. S. W. Corse, Montpelier's acknowledged leading photographer, and the result obtained has been most gratifying. With a very few exceptions all the portraits in this publication were made from Mr. Corse's negatives, and the careful posing, splendid lighting, and delicate retouching are all the work of an artist of taste, skill, and artistic conception. Photographs from these negatives may be secured at any time by communicating with Mr. Corse.

Much aid has been rendered by many members of the general assembly to whom are returned grateful thanks.
